

The Influence of Halal Labeling, Price, and Brand Image on Purchase Interest in Kahf Facial Foam Products (A Case Study on Male Students at PP Matholi'ul Anwar Lamongan). Ilyas Nur Fauzi, 2024, Management Program, Faculty of Economics, University Islamic Darul 'Ulum Lamongan.

ABSTRACT

The development of the business world today is very rapid, marked by increasing competition among companies. This causes them to compete with each other to gain market share. The consumption and use of halal products today are not only limited to food and beverages but also cover sectors like sharia finance, halal fashion, halal medicines, and halal cosmetics. With the development of halal products and the large Muslim population, awareness of using halal products has increased. This study aims to determine the influence of halal labeling, price, and brand image on the purchase interest in Kahf facial foam products among male students of the Matholi'ul Anwar Islamic Boarding School in Lamongan.

The research method used is quantitative research with data collection techniques using questionnaires. This research is motivated by the increasing awareness of Muslims about the importance of halal products in daily life, including in the use of facial foam products. In addition, the increasing competition in the facial foam industry encourages producers to focus not only on product quality but also on other aspects such as halal labeling, price, and brand image. The results show that halal labeling, price, and brand image have a significant influence on the purchase interest in Kahf facial foam products.

The results indicate that the variables of halal labeling, price, and brand image positively and significantly influence the purchase interest in Kahf facial foam products among male students of the Matholi'ul Anwar Islamic Boarding School in Lamongan.
